Abstract

One of the important aspects of constitutionalism is its legal aspect .Constitutionalism is the limitation of power ,and the limitation of power is done by legal means .Therefore ,this theory will be incomplete until legal approaches are included in the analysis of Iran's constitutionalism .The period of Introductions to Constitutionalism from the time of Abbas Mirza to the era of Nasser al-Din Shah is the period of acquaintance and the first theoretical thoughts and practical efforts regarding the creation of new legal concepts in Iran and A more detailed acquaintance with these concepts occurred in later periods .This period is very key to understanding Iranian constitutionalism ,and its study clearly shows that the theory of Iranian constitutionalism began several decades before the victory of the constitution revolution ,and what happened in the Iranian constitutional revolution was the result of these efforts .Among the legal concepts of this period ,only the relationship between the monarchy and government ,the concept of the constitution ,the concept of parliament and cabinet ,and the concept of judiciary are examined in this book .What has been important for the author in this book is the evolution of these concepts from the perspective of legal knowledge and constitutionalism .An examination of these concepts shows how the Iranians were able to have theoretical thoughts and practical efforts on these concepts through travelogues ,political treatises ,and the efforts of reformist prime ministers ,and even in some cases the decrees of the Qajar kings .With these studies ,it becomes clear what the history of Iranian constitutionalism is and what many efforts have been made for it.
